Amazon, others join the effort to transform health care

Posted by Dave Werry, Vice President, Consumer Health Products

There is clear consumer need for a simple, affordable and high-quality health care experience that helps people stay well, so it's not surprising to see more companies joining the effort to transform health care, as we saw announced recently. At Aetna, we're pushing to transform into a proactive, personal and community-based health care company focused on helping individuals achieve their unique health goals.

Scaling new, disruptive technologies into the health care system will enable us to have a high value-add and sustainable relationship with our members. To be effective and enhance member trust, these tools will be deeply rooted in clinical expertise and simple transparency.

"There is an unmet consumer need in health care. Individuals and families want a simple, affordable and high-quality experience that helps them stay well. Our combination with CVS Health will help address those needs at the local level, and I am encouraged to see other companies working toward the same goal." – Mark Bertolini on the announcement

Within Consumer Health Products, we're actively engaged with partners across the health care ecosystem and several leading technology companies, and these conversations are helping us shape an exciting innovation roadmap. Our approach is centered on new capabilities that are purpose-built and integrated seamlessly to drive a differentiated member experience.

Earlier this month, we launched two major advancements in our journey to transform the member experience: Aetna Health, the digital channel through which we will engage in a dialogue with our members, and Aetna One Advocate, our omni-channel premium offering. There's much more in store throughout 2018 as we differentiate our offering to members.
