Nokia applies for de-listing from the London Stock Exchange

Nokia Corporation (Nokia) has today filed an application to de-list Nokia shares from the London Stock Exchange. The liquidity of Nokia shares has been for several years very limited on the London Stock Exchange, currently representing less than one per cent of the total trading volume of Nokia shares globally. This measure will encourage the concentration of the trading of Nokia shares in the most liquid market places in Europe as well as in other markets.

After the de-listing in London, Nokia shares will be traded on the Helsinki Stock Exchange (HEX), the Frankfurt and Paris Stock Exchanges within the euro zone, New York Stock Exchange (NYSE), and Stockholm Stock Exchange. As of October 2003, HEX has represented approximately 60 per cent and NYSE approximately 25 per cent of the total trading volume in Nokia shares globally.

The de-listing will proceed through a notification process, with anticipated de-listing to take place on or about November 26, 2003.

October 8, 2003

Nokia completes the transaction of Motorola's Symbian shares

Nokia announced on August 29th its intention to increase the shareholding in Symbian by acquiring part of Motorola's Symbian shares. The announced transaction was subject to pre-emption process among other shareholders of Symbian and to a clearance by German Federal Cartel Office. The cartel office clearance is now complete and no other shareholder used the pre-emption rights apart from Nokia and Psion plc.

As a result, Nokia has purchased a number of Motorola's Symbian shares, representing 13.2% of all the shares in Symbian, while Psion plc has purchased the remaining Symbian shares of Motorola, representing 5.8 percent of all the shares. Nokia's shareholding in Symbian increases from 19.0 percent to 32.2 percent. The value of the shares purchased by Nokia is GBP 39.6 million.
