Kleinfeld: RTI acquisition well on track

Justine Coyne

Although the deal has yet to close, Alcoa Inc.'s preparation to integrate RTI International Metals Inc. is in full swing, according to Alcoa Chairman and CEO Klaus Kleinfeld.

Alcoa (NYSE: AA) announced March 9 it plans to acquire the Pittsburgh-based titanium maker in a deal valued at $1.5 billion. Speaking on a conference call with industry analysts Wednesday, Kleinfeld said he is expecting the deal to close in the next two to five months, pending Alcoa obtains all required regulatory clearances and RTI (NYSE: RTI) shareholder approval.

All is well on track, he said.

Over the past two weeks, Kleinfeld said he has visited four RTI locations to meet with leadership and employees and get an even better understanding of what the company will bring to Alcoa.

RTI brings with it unbelievable machining capability, where Alcoa, right now, has barely no machining capability, he said.

Cutting down on the use of external machining for Alcoa will save costs and build up capacity at the former RTI locations, he said. On top of that, RTI brings with it expanded technology and material capabilities.

Assuming the transaction closes, Alcoa plans to have RTI operate as a new business unit under Alcoa's engineered products and solutions business, he said.

In 2019, Alcoa is projecting RTI will contribute $1.2 billion in revenue, with an additional $100 million in net synergies expected in year four. Kleinfeld identified four areas where Alcoa has identified synergies:

$44 million in process productivity as a result of maximizing the internal metal supply of the combined companies, decreasing outsourced capacity, and increasing utilization of capacity;

$20 million in procurement savings by leveraging Alcoa's $18 billion global spend in commodities, production and maintenance supplies;

$20 million in overhead cost reductions by integrating the companies' finance, credit, human resources and information technology operations;

$25 million in growth based on an expanded selection of machined parts and offering RTI's titanium-aluminide for high-growth engine components.

Like its other acquisitions, Kleinfeld said it was not a lighthearted decision.

We would not have done any of these acquisitions without knowing what the integration would look like, he said.
