McDermott will be the name of the combined company.

Name of the Combined Company Announced

McDermott and CB&I announced that, following the closing of the combination, the combined company intends to retain the name McDermott.

We made this choice after a great deal of careful consideration, research and debate. Our approach was simple: The name had to provide a distinct, recognizable identity and a solid foundation for the new company and its future, said McDermott President and Chief Executive Officer David Dickson in a memo to employees. While the CB&I brand is a powerful name in our industry, the words Chicago Bridge & Iron no longer represent the business as it is today nor as we want it to be going forward.

The name McDermott provides a strong foundation for the combined company and a platform on which we can build our future together, said David, who will also lead the combined company. We are known today as a company that delivers excellence in project execution in a cost-efficient delivery structure for the global energy industry. Together, McDermott and CB&I will have the integrated technology, engineering expertise, unmatched experience and global reach to design and build the energy infrastructure of the future.

CB&I s industry-leading business that provides proprietary process technology licenses, associated engineering services, catalysts and engineered products will use the Lummus brand name. Lummus also offers process planning, project development services and a comprehensive program of aftermarket support primarily for the petrochemical and refining industries. The Lummus business will be housed with the combined company s leading edge initiatives, including McDermott s Digital Twin software platform GeminiTMDunder the umbrella of McDermott Technology.

CB&I s world-renowned tank business will also keep its current branding. CB&I has the most extensive global experience of any storage tank construction company in the industry, having built in excess of 46,000 storage structures in more than 100 countries on all seven continents.

The combination is expected to close in May 2018. It remains subject to customary conditions, including approval by McDermott s and CB&I s stockholders and other closing conditions.
